

SHARING INFORMATION ONLINE

There are so many different ways you can share information online!

Websites	A website is a great way to share information. You can combine images, words and principles of design to teach your readers what you know. Websites can also link to other, related sources and offer readers ideas about what they can do with the knowledge they have gained.
Blogs	Blogs tend to be more personal than websites. Short for “web log,” a blog is sort of like a journal entry published online. Blogs can be about particular kinds of themes—like recipes or current events—or they can be narratives from a person’s life.
Videos	If you are safe and sensible about it, posting videos can be another effective way to share information. When you post a video online, you have the opportunity to incorporate animation, images, moving images and spoken language. This can be a great way to activate all of the different ways people learn.
Podcasts	A podcast is a story told online with just your voice. Podcasts do not have images, so they can get listeners to tune in to your voice, your language and the specific story you have to tell. Podcasts can be narrative, informational or discussion-oriented.
Photos	Visual pictures can tell a thousand words; visual storytelling has the potential to frame moments that can mix art, science and documentary work. Producing and editing photos has never been easier due to improvements in camera specifications incorporated; the proliferation of mobile phones and the connectivity for mobile phones to the internet and social media (buddying journalists, mobile journalists/ MOJOs, bloggers or otherwise!).
